With unique heritage, spectacular views and delicious produce, Verbier and the Val de Bagnes is so much more than a skiing destination.

There's a loud crack and a moan metres away from me, as two huge female cows smash their heads together. To my left, another giant heifer tangles horns with a rival and tries to rip it to the ground. In between them, cows stand around a bellow out into the crisp, foggy air.

I'm not in Spain at a bullfight, which is the country most people associate with this kind of battle, but standing at almost 2,000 metres altitude near the top of a mountain in the Swiss Alps. All around me, dozens of huge cows are standing, snorting and fighting.

MANNEKEN PIS BEGINT WEL ÉRG VROEG AAN HET WINTERSPORT- SEIZOEN

Wie donderdag Manneken Pis zag, moet wel even grote ogen getrokken hebben. Het beroemde beeldje droeg... een skikostuum, geschonken door de Zwitserse gemeente Val de Bagnes.

De rode outfit is een eerbetoon aan de vele Belgische wintersporters die al generaties lang de skioorden in de regio, met name Verbier, hebben bezocht. Val de Bagnes, bekend om zijn adembenemende skigebieden en landschappen, heeft een lange geschiedenis van wintersport, en het skidorp Verbier is daar het kroonjuweel van. Al sinds het midden van de 20ste eeuw trekken Belgen in grote getale naar Verbier om te genieten van de sneeuw, de bergen en de gastvrijheid die de regio te bieden heeft. Het skikostuum van vandaag symboliseert deze warme band tussen de Zwitserse regio en de Belgische toeristen. (CSD)

HOW TO SNAP THE PERFECT HOLIDAY

Join a Swiss course and learn how to take stunning photographs, enjoying a fun break into the bargain. All you need is a phone...

by KEITH PERRY

PHOTOGRAPHER Melody Sky squints as she judges my latest snap of snowy mountain peaks in Verbier's stunning Swiss Alps. 'Well, your horizon's not quite straight and you've chopped off half of that beautiful mountain to the left,' she says.

Melody then takes my iPhone 15 and shows me how to compose a proper photo using the 'level feature' in the phone's settings and a grid to aid composition. The result is stunning and captures the Matterhorn in the distance. I'm starting to see that 'point and shoot' isn't all there is to it, even with a high-tech phone.

Earlier, Melody asked me to take a picture of a purple flower covered in morning dew.

'Get much closer to capture the droplets,' she said, pushing my phone right up so it was touching the petals. Again, the result was so much better than my original effort.

I'm on one of Melody's photography bootcamps with an array of more experienced photographers from the UK and Belgium, all aiming to boost our skills - whether using an iPhone or the latest Canon digital SLR.

Melody, based in Verbier for ten years, shoots skiing, snowboarding and ice diving, and can organise a camp for all levels, including beginners or for iPhone photography. There's even a camp for drone photographers, while astro photography camps have an astrophysicist present with a telescope and astronomy gear, and glacier photo camps have a glaciologist. Action sports camps have athletes, including a downhill bike pro to guide and model.

But be warned - it's not a holiday camp for sleepyheads. Melody's up at dawn to capture the mountains in their best light and she'll keep you up late for night photography lessons.

Our course includes a hike to picture snowy peaks at Mont Fort, Verbier's highest point. We cycle up from the town on e-mountain bikes to our base for the first night, Cabane Mont Fort - a pretty mountain hut at 2,457m.

Next day we head to our mountain campsite, the Alpage de la Chaux base camp, at 2,200m, where we are welcomed with cold beers and a delicious local cheese dish. There's even a sauna tent next to an ice-cold stream.

We focus on sunrise and sunset - and the few hours before and after both - learning how to use the fabulous light.

Top tips? Straighten your horizons, avoid objects around the edges of a photo, avoid chopping off feet, tops of heads and other important parts of a subject. Move your body instead of asking the subject to shift, use natural light and stabilise your camera/phone.

After three days, I leave with an album of thoughtfully framed photos... but the memories are the real joy.

Le Valais a deux religions, le catholicisme, et la raclette, qui ne va jamais sans un petit blanc. Ce dimanche, la Suisse a fêté les 450 ans de cette divine invention dans le Val de Bagnes, et ça a envoyé de la demi-meule...

Life-affirming glow of a summer on the slopes

WORDS
THOMAS HAWKINS

"I'm going to jump in, daddy." My youngest daughter, Freyja, stares at the diving board that stretches eight feet above the powder-blue water of the pool. I eye her nervously. I'm not sure I would attempt it. But she is six, she is young and fearless. I take the safer option of the metal steps. The water is cool and refreshing in the heat of the midday sun.

I watch as she climbs the ladder, strides forward and jumps without a hint of hesitation.

So far so normal for a family holiday in the sun. Except, this is anything but normal.

For we are not in a crowded hotel pool in Spain and the backdrop here is not identikit rows of apartment blocks. Instead, as I watch Freyja tiptoe across the poolside for another jump, my eye is drawn to a paraglider sailing in front of forested Alpine hills and rich green mountain pastures.

We are in Verbier, the jewel in the crown of Switzerland's famous 4 Vallées ski area, for a family holiday. And, courtesy of staying at one of the many hotels in Verbier, Val de Bagnes or La Tzoumaz, we have been given four Verbier Infinite Playground Passes, meaning entry to the outdoor pool is free.

The temperature is pushing into the high 20s and we quickly dry off before taking the five-minute walk back to The Shed Hotel, a classic Alpine retreat with a pared-back modern Scandi vibe. Our room is a top floor two-bedroom apartment that gives panoramic views of forests and snow-capped peaks.

We have a packed itinerary planned in a resort more known in the UK for adrenaline-filled activities such as skiing and skydiving. Our next stop is over the mountain for a family-friendly hike in the hills of neighbouring La Tzoumaz. They say that Verbier is a city in the mountain but, as far as distances go, it is tightly packed. So we could walk the 20 minutes to the gondola, but we are in Switzerland and it seems foolish not to take advantage of their flawless transport network.

Verbier has four free shuttle bus routes that zip you from one end of the resort to the other but when we check the timetable, we realise we have just missed one. The next bus is scheduled a whole three minutes later and, just like Swiss clockwork, it arrives right on time.

Thalia Furger from La Tzoumaz tourist board meets us off the gondola and shows us our options for hikes. The map is zigzagged with routes ranging from very easy to a little more adventurous. But with the sun still high in the sky, we choose the former and set off into the forest.

We meander along the trail, where paths curve among the trees and occasional breaks in the forest reveal gorgeous views across the valley. Along the way there are quizzes and sensory stations that encourage the children to learn about nature in this French-speaking part of Switzerland while at the same time expanding their French vocabulary, swapping squirrels and frogs with écureuils and grenouilles. After all the walking, we descend on Maison de la Forêt mountain snack bar for some delicious homemade food, cold drinks and more stunning views of the steep-sided hills.

One of my favourite fantasies is imagining a life away from the cold, wet UK and I spend a minute daydreaming about searching the local classifieds for jobs in Verbier.

Back to reality and back at The Shed Hotel the next day, we meet Clément Guntern from Verbier Tourism who tells us about a Swiss National Day celebration planned for later that evening.

"There will be a big party here," he says, pointing to the front of the hotel, where people are erecting a stage, while others busily set up market stalls for the August 1 event. "There will be a band playing, food and, I think, some fireworks," he adds.

A few hours later, the street outside has been transformed. The road is a sea of bodies, swaying to the music from the band on stage. As we inch our way through the crowds, we spot Clément. He, like the rest of Verbier, has clocked off work and is enjoying a beer with friends. It looks like such great fun, and I am sad that I can't join in the party. Alas, my girls are dragging me off to buy candyfloss and novelty hats. Thankfully, from our room at The Shed we have the best seat in the resort, so we get comfortable on the balcony as the sun sets and the festivities, like the cogs of a mountain bike, kick up a gear. Pretty soon the night sky is filled with a chorus of fireworks. The sky has turned an ebony black and the stars seem to glitter in time to the music. Just then we notice a trail of lights sailing overhead. It takes a moment to compute what we are witnessing – a daredevil paraglider shooting fireworks into the night from beneath their (high-flammable)

What kind of cyclist is Verbier region for?

What are the best cycling climbs in the Verbier

The cycling in Verbier, and the surrounding region of Val de Bagnes and La Tzoumaz, is a gem of the Swiss cycling scene. It provides a world-class cycling destination for cyclists that love to climb.

Unsurprisingly, the roads here often buzz with top level cycling events including the Tour de Suisse, Tour de Romandie and Tour des Stations.

What's special about cycling in Switzerland's Alps is the mix it offers: towering mountains, well-maintained roads, courteous drivers, quiet routes, impressive infrastructure, vibrant nature, tasty food, unexpectedly good wine,
